in a speech sulegizing the old soldiers, and in which he said with great warmth that the time ought to be far distant when we diadain those brave defenders; he "hoped his tongue might cleave to the roof of his mouth and his right sam be palsied before the day should came that he joined in an attempt like this to put the foot of the people of Brattleboro on the neck of the Grand Army."

G. B. Kirwan followed in a similar strain. Mr. Stoddard earnesstly opposed the Estey amendment. If adopted it tied the town up to one design and shut out all opportunity for free choice or competition. He sincerely regreited the apparent attempt to array the Grand Army, as a body, in favor of the proposed amendment. The citizens desired so opportunity to creet a monument to the soldiers who entered the service from Brattleboro, and it was more fitting that the citizens should have the matter in charge than that the Grand Army as a body should erect such a monument to their own memory, and he lamented any attempt to ignore this privilege of the citizens.

dobate closed with a few well-chosen The debate closed with a few well-chosen words from Mr. Harris, who, voicing a sentiment already touched upon by other speakers, caid he hoped the Haskins resolution would prevail, for by its terms it was the whole town which proposed to build a monument in memory of its brave defenders, the members of the Grand Army, as citizens, bearing their equal share of the expenses. It was a far greater honor to the Grand Army that the town should do this than that the old soldiers should seek to take the lead in the crection of a monument to themselves.

Mr. Estey's substitute was first put to vote and was lost by an overwhelming majority, vica voce. The question was then put to vote on Col. Haskins' original resolution. The meeting voted seemingly as one man, with a

Mrs. Ada Bowles, the regularly ordained Universalist minister and well-known woman's suffrage advocate, spoke last week under the auspices of S. of T. Unquestionably an able speaker, Mrs. Bowles presented the tomperance cause with strong effect, basing her argument partly on interesting statistics, and most skillfully leading to woman's suffrage as a remedy against the drink demon. There was a decided difference of opinion in regard to portions of her lecture. Strictures on 8-ustor Edmunds aroused special discussion.

Some said her comments were just others considered them ill timed and onjust. Probably most of our citizens think that the public record of Vermont's chosen man will go down in history as allied to state-manship of the highest and purest type, notwithstanding his bill to disfranchise Mormon women under the exigencies of their peculiar institution.
Never has the temperance cause been so ably and cloquently presented in our community as during the past two or three years, by ladies who wear the white ribbon, Mrs. Bowles included. But perhaps the Windham county juil records afford even stronger arguments on the drink question. These records give rum as the cause of mest commitments. The

Mr. Barrett Can Stand It.

[From the Middlebury Register,] The auti E Imunds sheets join in a chorus of abuse of Mr. Barrett, the Washington correspondent of the Boston R cord and Ad-vertiser, who has told lots of truth about the senatorial campaign in this state. But Mr. Barrett can stand it. He is a member of an old and esteems of family, a graduate of Dartmouth college, and represents at the national capital a journal which would not for a moment employ a man whom it did not consider both capable and honest. Moreover, those engineering the campaign against Mr. Edmunds cogist to know that a personal fight is just the thing they do not want to provoke. Too much that is true can be said by Mr. Ednds's friends.

Ex-President Arthur's doctor has been interviewed. He says the distinguished inva-lid's deficulty is not functional derangement of the stomach, but he will not say what it is, being decidedly opposed to medical bul-l-tins like those issued about Garfield and Grant. Mr. Arthur is better, and may live 20 years, he declares.
